Readings: 5 th Sunday in Ordinary Time (B)
1 st Reading	2 nd Reading	Gospel
Job 7: 1-4, 6-7	1 Corinthians 9: 16-19, 22-23	Mark 1: 29-39

On Suffering, Prayer, and Collective Transformation
[One motif in today's readings] is suffering – first bemoaned by Job, and then faced head-on by Jesus. Job's litany of misery stands in sharp contrast to the healing power of God made manifest in Jesus.... Suffering is an inherent aspect of the human condition... not to be understood or endured as retributive justice for sin. [Nor is it] an end in itself. [But] suffering for the sake of others; death endured by a just one for the purpose of redeeming the unjust – in this we find a profound, almost inscrutable mystery. It is a mystery into which those who follow Jesus must let themselves be led.

The Gospel, Paul insists [in the Epistle], is for everyone.... He did not select [just those] he thought worthy of his message.... Pope Paul VI defined evangelization as the “process of bringing Good News into all the strata of humankind and, through its influence, transforming from within and making it new.” The purpose of evangelization is the “interior change of the personal and collective consciousness of people, the activities in which they engage, and the concrete milieux which are theirs” (Evangelii Nuntiandi).... The Gospel must speak to the here and now as well as the world to come. For that reason, those who preach, teach, and witness to the Gospel are to be concerned with human advancement, justice, and liberation, as well as the future participation of all of humankind in the reign of God.

Grace is that experience of going from loss to gain, eyes opened to what we did not see before.... From [a] prayerful interlude in a deserted place, Jesus emerged with a firm resolve to move beyond his home base in Capernaum and minister to all of Galilee. This “man for others” had come ... to give himself and his message to everyone. His itinerant ministry continues to challenge and inspire the church to be less institutional and more mobile, more available and accessible to all.
