The Vine as Image of Unity

In today's first reading from Acts, we see Peter slowly growing into the realization that God is impartial and indiscriminating. God loves and accepts all who stand in awe before God regardless of their race, gender, social status, age or background.... This was a watershed moment for the early church.... In the second reading, [John] speaks frankly about love. Love is of God; God is love.... Those who truly know God will love others, and that love will witness the presence of God among us.... [In] today's Gospel... Jesus is calling his own to remain in his love, to keep the commandments to love another, to go and bear fruit and to ask the Father anything in his name – all this in order that they might know joy....

Pope Francis, is a model of how to share this inclusive love of God. [He] makes headlines around the world because of his open and cordial interactions with people of all races, cultures and religions. He welcomes and embraces young and old, rich and poor, able-bodied and disabled, people of different backgrounds, lifestyles and political and religious persuasions. For Pope Francis, all are included in God's love, with a special place for those who are on the margins. It's a safe bet that more people will be open to accepting the Good News and living their lives by it if they experience a disciple who brings God's love to all, without restriction. That disciple may be Pope Francis – or you or me.

Earth Day and Pope Francis' Encyclical "Laudato Si" have both reminded us that good stewardship of Creation is a moral as well as a practical matter. Even the smallest efforts we make to protect the earth really do count. As parishioners, we can practice the "3 Rs" – Reduce, Reuse, and Recycle – at home, at work, and especially within our Church community. Those responsible for parish events – or for a household – should consult the suggestions in the green information sheet soon to be available at the back of the church.

Unwanted prescription or non-prescription eyeglasses can be put to good use in low-income countries. To give someone the gift of better sight, bring glasses to the Office any time.
