Prophecy in a Time of Great Uncertainty

It isn't just that John the Baptist's parents are too old to have children, but his father, a priest, has remained miraculously mute since the day an angel announced that John would be born. Elizabeth, his mother, herself from a priestly clan, has become the spokesperson for the family. She not only names their child, but by acknowledging Mary as the mother of the Lord, she and the child who leapt in her womb have become the first to proclaim Jesus.

In today's Gospel, Mary has returned home [after the Visitation].and Elizabeth has given birth to John the Baptist, the last of the ancient prophets and forerunner of the Messiah. John would become a most unusual saint: a fiery preacher who was unafraid to call soldiers and tax collectors to reform. At first, John avoided Jerusalem and the centres of power, remaining far from the public eye. But when he began preaching, he did it with his whole heart and with impeccable integrity. No threat had the power to stop him: He was God's sharp sword and polished arrow. His ministry came to an end because he spoke the truth about King Herod, the conniving, cowardly womanizer who exercised far more power than strength or conscience.

John is one of a few figures from the Christian Scriptures whom we call saints even though they were not followers of Jesus. He began his mission at an in-between time while Jesus was living in obscurity. John heralded wonder and mystery. In a time of mystifying change, he called his people to prepare their lives and hearts for what was to come – but he couldn't proclaim a mystery that was yet to be revealed. John showed the humility and faithfulness to be the precursor who never knew precisely who was to come after him
