Lessons about Healing and Faith

[In today's Gospel] the healed woman... may not have known a formal creed, but she believed that God wills fullness of life for all creatures. She might have pondered the story of Job, who believed in God's justice even when he could not comprehend it... [Her] faith was audacious enough to break religious taboos. She believed in God's goodness more than she believed in the limitations put on her by the law. Even as a beginner, one who had so far only "heard about" Jesus, she imitated him in valuing life over legality. Somehow, she understood his heart in ways that few others did... The story of Jairus and his unnamed daughter is one of many in which third parties appealed on behalf of the person who needed Jesus' help... and he healed in response to the faith of the committed petitioners rather than the faith of those who were healed... These stories say a great deal about the power and necessity of praying on behalf of others... and offer a not-so-subtle critique of individualistic concepts of faith that demand personal conviction as a requisite for salvation... In the end, today's scriptures call us to reflect on how much our faith leads us beyond our fears.
