Beyond Transubstantiation

Jesus' last words in today's Gospel offer the invitation to live forever. It's as though after five weeks of pondering the mystery of 'Jesus, the bread of life,' we are still not adequately prepared to come to a conclusion. John the Evangelist keeps us circling around this theme because we cannot easily fathom its depth.... Jesus' message could have seriously upset people from two very different perspectives. First, the guardians of orthodoxy, bent on protecting or defending the holiness of God, were convinced they were hearing blasphemy: Jesus' teachings presented God as all too immanent, all too tangible, all too incarnate. People on the other end of the spectrum recognized the immeasurable potential and overwhelming responsibility Jesus' teaching implied. Worship would never get them off the hook if they were called to live the love of God to the degree that Jesus was suggesting. Jesus said as much when he told the disciples, "live in my love," or more pointedly, "Whoever believes in me will do the works that I do and ... greater."

Those who listened carefully understood that Jesus was presenting himself as God's gift in their day just as surely as the manna had been God's gift for their ancestors in the wilderness. They caught the full impact of his implication that he was there in flesh and blood to save them more completely than the paschal lamb and its blood had saved their ancestors on the night of the Passover. They realized that he was saying that union with him was the way to eternal life....

Sacramental theology teaches about the transformation of bread and wine, but Jesus points us beyond concentration on those elements. Jesus speaks of flesh and blood as the medium of his presence. He was speaking the language of heart and soul, not chemistry and physics. Jesus gave a very similar discourse at the Last Supper when he said, "I am the vine and you are the branches" (John 15:1-8). In both discourses, Jesus bids his followers to allow his life to flow through them by using metaphors of the most intimate connection possible. When he presents himself as bread, flesh and blood for the eating, the invitation is to receive and take him in such that his very life becomes our own.
