Readings: 22nd Sunday in Ordinary Time (B)

1 st Reading	2 nd Reading	Gospel
Deuteronomy 4: 1-2, 6-8	James 1: 17-18, 21-22, 27	Mark 7: 1-8, 14-15, 21-23

Obey from the Heart, Put Faith into Action

In Deuteronomy, Moses expresses God's will in an almost incarnational way: "What nation is there that has gods so close ... as the Lord, our God, is to us?... and [which] has statutes and ordinances as just as this entire law..." The law is God's way of drawing close to the people, God's way of sharing divine creativity and purpose with the chosen people, a form of communion. Moses explains that if his people obey the law, their way of life will make them a sign to the nations, a witness to who God is. Moses admonished his people neither to add nor subtract from the law. Now, all law needs interpretation to apply it meaningfully to particular circumstances. But interpretation is always limited to those circumstances and cannot supplant the law. Therefore, scribes, Pharisees, guardians of the tradition, theologians, and hierarchs must keep their own limitations in mind.

This aspect of today's OT reading complements today's Gospel. When the Pharisees speak of compulsory hand washings, they are referring to interpretations that had grown up around the Mosaic law. While not the law itself, these traditions were originally intended to work like a "fence around the Torah;" to facilitate full obedience. In some cases, the fence decayed into a de facto elitism that marginalized others. The scribes and Pharisees sanctified legalisms that their lifestyle allowed them to maintain while they denigrated some people of God who could not afford the same privilege. Women and men came to be labeled as sinners or unclean due to their professions, state of health, economic status, or even gender. In every society, from churches to families, once-beneficial practices can become rigid customs that usurp the authority of law. Jesus defended his disciples, and criticized the Pharisees, not for their hygienic practices, but because they had allowed their ritual behaviours to supersede or even pervert the underlying intent of the law itself. He quoted Isaiah, declaring their observances worthless in God's sight.

Jesus then says the law calls for obedience that springs from the heart, not mechanical conformity to a code of conduct. Today's Epistle reading ("be doers ... not hearers only") adds the need to put faith into action as the only way to live with integrity. Prophetic members of the community are responsible for calling individuals who have slipped into lip-service – or even the church as a whole – back to the integrity of just action. James says religion that is pure is this: care for the neediest and freedom from the false values of society.
