REFLECTION

A PARABLE ABOUT “OBEDIENCE” vs REPENTANCE

[In today’s reading of the parable of a father and two sons], one of these sons was outwardly obedient to the father. The second ran away from his father’s love to wallow in sin and passions. But it so happens that the latter is the one who is able stop and shudder as he becomes aware of the scope of the monstrous act he has committed before Heaven and his father. His spirit ascends to the highest heights attainable to human being – he enters into an awareness that the temple of his soul is monstrously defiled. He himself had robbed and defiled his father’s inheritance, namely, life, love, care, goodness, and tenderness. He himself trampled upon the best of everything he had, destroying it and profaning it.

The prodigal son realized all this. And this is what each person is called to do. After the Fall, after every one of us without exception became a prodigal son – whether we admit it or ignore it in our complacency – God the Father is waiting for only one thing from us: the awareness of our blindness and mistakes. Without this we are simply incapable of stopping our headlong fall into the abyss of eternal death.

The second son in the parable never left the father physically. But in spirit he was, consciously, in a land just as far away as his brother. As opposed to the prodigal son, who left his father, the “righteous” son didn’t return to him. He proved incapable of what is most important for man on earth – ascending to the heights of repentance, giving rise to communion with God and peace with Him. The exemplary behavior of the “righteous one” is grateful from the bottom of his heart that he is not like his good-for-nothing brother – that prodigal son who squandered his father’s inheritance with harlots! But why are you, father, so unfairly condescending and kind to him? How dare you forgive him? This, after he has squandered your wealth, which after all could have belonged to me?! After he has wallowed to his heart’s content in sin, which I have been forbidding myself all this time? Why do you pay any attention to him, and not to me – who am worthy of your attention? This elder, righteous, and hopelessly lost man is also a prodigal son, also an unhappy child. This brother is a threatening example for all who appear to abide correctly in the father’s house.

Fortunately for us, there is yet another son in the parable—the One who is narrating it to us. He is the One whom the Father sends for the salvation of these and other prodigal children, for the salvation of each and every one of us. It is He in whom there is the fullness of the Divinity: Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, who sacrifices Himself for us.

The prodigal son found the path away from his destruction. From the spiritual point of view, the older brother has only one way out: a sincere recognition that “there is no one worse than me.” Probably we all know this expression. But even here we often manage to successfully convert the cross-bearing courage of spiritually abiding in this truth into a comfortable hypocrisy of a barren knowledge of correct formulas....
