PROFIT & LOSS – AND GRACE

This week the scriptures invite us to consider profit and loss – and grace. The prophet Amos, rancher and orchard owner by trade, goes on the offensive against his wealthy colleagues who have, as Pope Francis would say, allowed the culture of prosperity to deaden them. They don't seem to comprehend the self-destructive power of their own greed. They have permitted the collection of debts – whether valuable as silver or paltry as a pair of sandals – to blind them to human faces. Unlike the poor who know they must rely on one another, those lost in affluence can insulate themselves temporarily. But as God warns, material security is time-limited; only relationships last forever.

While Amos delivers his message in dire terms, Jesus uses enigmatic stories to trick his listeners into new patterns of thinking. Imagine the laughter that would have lit up Jesus' eyes as he provoked chuckles with his table-turning tales. With the steward, Jesus obviously wanted to shock pious moralizers: first a wastrel, then a cheat! But this steward had carefully followed the example of his master, who prospered by the sweat of the debtors' brows. The steward had refinanced a fortune and probably lost all his commissions in the bargain. He was gambling that a kind of "social capital" would offer more security than his job.

In a twist that makes more sense in Jesus' culture than in our own – but may be the real point of the story – the sacked servant left his master in a baffling predicament. Before it got out that the steward had lost his debt-collector's badge, everyone would have been marveling at the owner's stature and munificence: They'd have thought such debt cancellation was surely a sign of immense wealth and generosity! The debtors would have been delighted with the deal and suddenly would have become more loyal customers than ever. All that increased the master's prestige even as it diminished his profits. In a society that valued honour over material wealth, the master would have ended up losing more than he gained, had he tried to recoup his financial losses. So Jesus, who always avoided black-and-white thinking, had the servant demonstrate that while money can't buy love, friendship engenders its own rewards.

What, then, is today's message about profit and loss, and grace? This Gospel is certainly not calling us to cook the books. Jesus knew the prophetic message; he designed this story to poke at listeners of every social status. While most of us will never be in a position to manage (much less own) immense fortunes, we all need to figure out how best to use the resources, opportunities, and – perhaps most important – the problems we have. When his behavior bore fruit in lemons, the steward in this story brewed up enough lemonade for everyone.
